

Proposed net-metering ordinance at center of contention

By Chris McDaniel, Staff Writer | Posted 10 hours ago

RIVERSIDE — The County of Riverside wants to force Imperial Irrigation District — through a proposed county ordinance — to provide additional incentives to electrical customers who have installed solar panels on their properties. IID officials, staunchly opposed against any measure that would undermine their authority to set their own rates, and stating it is already in compliance with established California State law, is fighting tooth and nail.

A service is needed to view this article.

Sign in

Or select a service.

Premium Plus Get unlimited access to Premium and Premium Plus content with our Premium Plus - Digital Access Subscription. Read our E-Edition, the digital replica of the print newspaper online, access content in exclusive sections including Family, Teen, Business, Databases, Farm and more. Additionally, receive daily home delivery of the Imperial Valley Press. <ul style="list-style-type: none">◦ $13.00 for 30 days	<input type="radio"/>
Premium Get unlimited access to Premium content with our Premium - Digital Access Subscription. Access exclusive sections including Local News, Sports, Probe, Opinion and more. Additionally, receive Sunday and Monday home delivery of the Imperial Valley Press. <ul style="list-style-type: none">◦ $9.00 for 30 days	<input type="radio"/>
One-Day Pass Get unlimited access to Premium and Premium Plus content for one full day with our Premium Plus - Digital Access One-Day Pass. Get instant access for one full day (24 hours) without a digital access subscription or a daily home delivery subscription. <ul style="list-style-type: none">◦ $1.99 for 1 day	<input type="radio"/>